THEME:

Urban Farming: Local Action, Global SCOPE

Using agricultural innovations and global scales of technology transfers, the world food production has been able to keep up with the spectacular population growth on our planet. Hunger and starvation are not technical problems anymore, but outcomes of conflicts, market conditions, and sometimes incredibly inhumane behaviors of powerful political agents.

Yet we cannot take these trends for granted. Our planet is stressed by our ways of production, industrialization of agriculture is slowly eroding the soils and overall, we need to become smarter and eco-friendly in our food production. Hence the drive for urban farming, pushed even by the World Food Program. SO, let's talk about how we in Philadelphia can contribute to this trend. Speakers to be announced.

Goal: To make Philadelphia a global example of how to green the urban landscape and produce food at the same time.
