

Stories that Matter

Spotlight on Human Rights - November 2017

Bureau of Investigative Journalism <https://www.thebureauinvestigates.com>

The Bureau of Investigative Journalism is based in London and sees itself as an “Independent, non-profit media organisation that holds power to account”. It address a broad range of issues and places a very strong emphasis on human rights -- see their human rights focus page: <https://www.thebureauinvestigates.com/topics/human-rights>.

Some of the Bureau’s key areas of human rights concern are the migration crisis, privatized warfare, CIA torture, counterterrorism, the surveillance state and drone warfare. It has become one of the world’s most authoritative sources on the extent of drone warfare by the United States. The Bureau’s investigations and coverage have helped force greater transparency by the U.S., and by other countries, about the number and location of drone strikes as well as civilian deaths. Some of the organization's other areas of focus are corporate and police behavior, fake news (as well as fake or counterfeit food and drugs). Via its website the Bureau offers a regular online newsletter. It also offers the public, journalists, and whistleblowers safe ways to provide important information or suggest new stories.

HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE BUREAU

12.12.17
LOBBYING'S HIDDEN INFLUENCE

Inside the corporate investigations business

How big companies employed private security firms which used all sorts of methods to monitor the public

07.12.17
LOBBYING'S HIDDEN INFLUENCE

Astroturfing, Twitterbots, Amplification - Inside the Online Influence Industry

12.12.17 THE BUREAU LOCAL

Delays, cuts, benefit changes: domestic violence refugees in crisis

As MPs head to parliament to debate the future of funding for women's

25.09.17 COUNTERTERRORISM

How "ghost soldiers" could frustrate Trump's plans for Afghanistan

The rise and fall of one district in Afghanistan's embattled Helmand